Conversation begins at approximately 10:00

Penton Alright, is there anything else I can do for you?

KIMBALL No, no, I just wanted to hear your voice. I like talking to you. I miss you.

Penton I know I miss you. I slept on your side for the last few nights, it was nice.

KIMBALL Did ya?

Penton Yeah.

KIMBALL I won't feel bad if you put the electric blanket on for a few days (inaudible)

Penton I've been keeping the window shut so it's not quite as cold.

KIMBALL Gotcha

Penton (inaudible) you were there, it would cold.

KIMBALL Do you got, some, a picture of my face on your pillow yet?

Penton I do actually, I'm not washing the sheets, not until I know you're coming home.

KIMBALL Yeah. I do miss you a lot. Um

Penton I know, I miss you, this is stupid.

KIMBALL Very much so, I'm glad you're sticking around. Not stressing or worried out.

Penton No

KIMBALL I wouldn't have blamed you, or held it against you for ADIOSing, but..

Penton Not yet

KIMBALL Not yet, I'm kind of proud of you.

Penton Yeah

KIMBALL Fingers crossed

Penton Uh huh, just get it worked out and get home

KIMBALL Yeah there are some perks to it, I won't talk about it now, but there's a...I have a...there's a thought process for when this did happen, if it ever did, and it did. There's a contingency plan. It's a lot of work, but it'll work out.

Penton It'll work out

KIMBALL Yeah, let's just..if it all works out, lets just say the kids technically won't ever have to work again for the rest of their lives.

Penton I just want you home

KIMBALL I know.
